

EWOR's Double Opt-In Intro Template

A Primer On Double Opt-In Intros — Why Do They Matter?

If you want to introduce two people to each other, we recommend you do a double opt-in introduction.

We regard this as an incredibly important demonstration of respecting both individuals and their unique circumstances:

Respecting their time

People are often busy, and they may not be able to respond to or act on an introduction immediately.

By seeking their consent first, you acknowledge their schedule and avoid putting them in an awkward position.

Respecting their judgment

They might have reasons for not pursuing the introduction that you're unaware of, whether it's personal, professional, or simply a matter of timing.

Asking beforehand gives them the chance to decline gracefully.

Double opt-in introductions are a thoughtful way to show you value the other person, their priorities, and their boundaries.

It's a small but significant step toward making meaningful, respectful connections.

We consider time a very scarce resource at EWOR

Many of our Partners cannot accommodate all requests for calls, simply because there are not enough hours in our week to do so.

Sometimes, we do get introductions to people we don't have the time to chat with.

If we respond and explain the situation, both the person who introduced us and the one who got introduced to us stand in a bad light:

1. The person who made the introduction feels embarrassed because they didn't check in before
2. The person who got introduced feels embarrassed because their desire to chat is not met.

There are plenty of other reasons, but in almost all of them, introductions that are not double opt-in are net negative.

We hence recommend checking in with both parties before you write an introduction.

The essential ingredients for a double opt-in intro

- 1 Check in with person a: Do they want to be introduced?
- 2 Check in with person b: Do they want to be introduced?
- 3 Write an introduction

How a founder / investor introduction could look like

Investor Opt-In

→ Only sent to the investor

Hi {investor},

I would like to introduce you to {founder}, because {reason}.

This is their background: {founder_description}, {company_description}.

Can I connect you with {founder}?

Best,

{your_name}

Founder Opt-In

→ Only sent to the founder

Hi {founder},

I would like to introduce you to {investor}, because {reason}.

This is their background: {investor_description}, {similar_companies_invested_in}.

Can I connect you with {investor}?

Best,

{your_name}

Introduction

→ Only if both agreed to the introduction

Hi both,

It's a pleasure to introduce you regarding {introduction_reason}!

{founder}, {investor <including LinkedIn hyperlink>} is {short description}.

{investor}, {founder <including LinkedIn hyperlink>} is {short description}.

Feel free to take it from here.

Best,

{your_name}

