

EWOR's Double Forwardable Email Double Opt-In Template

A Primer On The Forwardable Email Intro Template

Roy Bahat has written a fantastic article about the "forward intro email". We recommend that you read it and our own template for double opt-in introductions as a primer.

The Forwardable Email can be especially useful if you want several introductions from one person, but can also be useful for single introductions, especially if the person making the introduction is very busy.

If you want certain introductions, say you are a founder and want to be introduced to investors, we recommend you send them a forwardable email for all people you'd like to be introduced to.

Roy notes that a good template:

1. Says why you want to be introduced
2. Includes its own context (e.g. startup description, attached files).
3. Is as short as it could be, but not shorter
4. Sounds authentic
5. Starts a fresh chain, with a fitting subject line, for each introduction

Below, we have listed how a founder / investor introduction could look:

Forwardable Email Sent by You

→ Subject Line: Introduction to {Investor} | {Startup_Name}

Hi {introducer},

I would love to chat with {investor}, because {reason}

A bit about me and my company: {founder description}, {company description}

{description of time line}

Thank you, EWOR.

Best,
{your_name}

→ Subject Line: Introduction to Petter Made | DueDeal

Hi Daniel,

I would love to chat with Petter Made, because he has one of the best European FinTech companies, which has been an inspiration to me. He has also invested in Dealflo and DealNex, so I'm sure he'll get our space.

A bit about me and my company: I graduated from LSE and am a self-taught coder, now building DueDeal, which shortens due diligence for business buyers and sellers, streamlining transactions and improving outcomes.

We are planning to close our round in two weeks, so a speedy introduction would be very appreciated.

Thank you, EWOR.

Best,
Othman

Hey Petter, see below! Othman likes to be introduced to you.

I met him yesterday and found him incredibly clever.

Let me know if you have time to chat so I can introduce you!
